I waited too long. It isn't worth it anymore for me to get the flu shot.

Flu season still has many a week to thrive. It typically lasts from December through March. Getting a flu shot now will protect you for the rest of the season.

I already had the flu this season, so I don't need a flu shot.

If you've had the flu, you'll be protected from that strain, but several other strains abound. The flu shot protects against three.

I hate needles. I'm too scared to get the flu shot.

Needle-fearing healthy folks ages 2 to 50 can get a nasal-spray vaccine, which has a weakened virus. The virus is so weak that you can't get sick from it either.

I got the flu vaccine, so I don't need to do anything else.

You should still be washing your hands, using hand sanitizer, coughing into an elbow, drinking plenty of fluids, getting enough sleep, eating healthy food and exercising regularly. And even then you might get it.

I didn't get the flu shot, because it could give me the flu.

The flu shot does not give you the flu. The vaccine has a dead (inactive) virus, so it can't make you sick.

I got the vaccine, so I won't get the flu.

You could get the flu even if you've had the vaccine. You're a lot less likely to get it, though. I had the flu, but I feel better today. I must not be contagious anymore.

news flash

You are contagious up to seven days after the start of your flu illness. You also are contagious 24 hours before you show symptoms.

I'm pregnant, so I can't get the flu vaccine.

Pregnant women, especially, should get the flu shot.

If I wear a scarf or a mask, I probably won't get the flu.

This generally will not keep you from getting the flu. Though it's recommended that you don't touch your face too much, wearing a mask or scarf usually won't prevent the flu. GRICAGOTRIBUNE

Married friends will get you laid

They get a burn rap as boring shut-ins. That's BS. Your married friends have a lot to offer, and it's high time you gave them their props. Here's why:

They always want you to come over

Want to come watch the game? Want to check out this wine we brought back from Napa? Want to come over for dinner? Your married homies love having people over to do random things, from barbecues to beer tastings. It's not that they hate being around each other all the time (well, I'm sure some do); they just want to keep in touch with buddies and the outside world.

They haven't really changed

Sure, there are people who get married and immediately start looking down on the same activities they did three months ago. Those people suck. Your married friends are still your friends. They still like partying, (Some would say they like it more.) They still are down to take trips, go to dinner and hit the bar with reckless abandon. Just don't expect it to be a regular occurrence.

They really want you to get laid

What's better than one wingman? Two, of course! Your married friends want to see you happy. Having absolutely no dog in the fight, they're willing to employ their collective skills to help you get your swerve on. Also, it's a fun way to live vicariously through you. (Or so I've been told.)

They know about 'adult things'

We're talking 401(k)s and mortgages here. I'm not even going to pretend like one of my married friends hasn't helped me with my taxes the last four years. They care about things such as insurance, establishing solid credit and where the housing market is going, Meanwhile, you're worried about whether that guy you made out with at the AYCD wristband Happy Hour will call you. Advantage: marrieds.

Babies!

For the first time ever, you get full access to a real baby who isn't yours. It's like Redbox. Pick it out, play with it and then return it! No stress involved. If you're lucky, your friends will name you a godparent, which establishes you as the "cool" aunt/uncle for the remainder of time. Also, you get to teach them cool stuff Example: Baby-sitting your friend's 2-year-old? Give the kid a lunch of baked beans and play a bunch of hardcore rap, then send him home to his unsuspecting parents, Hee, Larious,

The wedding itself

Your married friends want you to celebrate this very special day with them and need you to keep them from going insane. You have been entrusted with this one task, and your reward is a wild party with ridiculous food and unlimited booze. Take 405 pictures, drink your body weight in champagne, and be sure to tell them how much you "love them, like, so much" no fewer than 21 times.

FROST AND FLAME

Chicago firefighters have the gear to battle blazes in even the most brutal weather

Chicago Tribune

The large and deadly blazes that Chicago firefighters have battled this week have posed an additional challenge, courtesy of the city's coldest temperatures in nearly two years:

Ice—and lots of it.

Ice can undermine efforts to extinguish flames. It can seal hydrants, crack hoses, make stairs and ladders treacherous, and weigh down buildings and firefighters, Deputy Fire Commissioner of Operations John McNicholas said.

"Things that normally work well in regular, normal, warmer temperatures, when you start to encase them in ice, you can have [problems]," McNicholas said.

McNicholas and hundreds of Chicago firefighters responded to two large blazes this week in subfreezing temperatures, including one high-rise apartment fire that left two people dead.

The department prepares for such frigid firefighting months in advance. Every fall, the department inspects the city's fire hydrants to ensure they are working and that any water is removed. But if the hydrant is used by others later and improperly shut down, water can remain and freeze the hydrant shut, department officials said.

When that happens, firefighters sometimes thrust a road flare into the hydrant to melt any ice. The city also sends a truck that uses pressurized steam to thaw frozen hydrants or equipment, Chicago Fire Department spokesman Larry Langford said.

The Fire Department also uses additional engines to scout for working hydrants, Langford said.

Once the hoses are connected, however, firefighters must monitor the flow of the water to make sure the hoses and engine, which hold up to 500 gallons of water, don't freeze.

"You have to keep the water flowing," Langford said. "If you shut the hose down too long, the water will start to freeze. The hose will start to freeze on the ground and you've got an extremely difficult situation if you've got a couple of hundred feet of frozen hose lying on the street."

In the fire that broke out about 8:40 a.m. Tuesday in a South Shore condominium building, ice wasn't a big factor because the fire mostly was fought inside the building. Though the National Weather Service estimated the temperature hovered around zero, very little hose was exposed and the fire was contained within an hour, Langford said.

That was not the case for a fire that engulfed a large Bridgeport warehouse around 9 p.m. Tuesday. Since the building was unstable, firefighters decided to fight the rare 5-II alarm fire from the outside, using a "surround and drown" approach, Langford said.

Although firefighters encountered some frozen hydrants, water supply was not difficult to establish on Ashland Avenue, allowing responders to dump hundreds of thousands of gallons of water on the burning building.

So much water was used, in fact, that a small weather system developed over the fire, dropping light snow on the scene, Langford said.

Kevin Birk, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Romeoville, said that such localized weather phenomena are possible in the right conditions.

"When they were throwing the water on the fire, it could have caused water vapor to go up and form a cloud," Birk said. "And, since it was so cold, it created ice crystals that become heavy enough to fall as snow."

In the 9- to 10-degree weather that evening, the water on the ground quickly turned to ice, coating the firefighters, hoses, engines, ladders and building.

"It's safe to say we had about 8 inches of ice in the front of the building because there's equipment, a hose that was on the street, that was buried by the ice. And then of course the building itself probably had a coating of three or four inches of ice on it," McNicholas said. "Some described it as a very large ice castle."

That much ice can weaken a building, making it even more dangerous for firefighters. At the scene Tuesday night, firefighters donned their modernized "bunker gear," including bib-height insulated pants and sturdy rubber winter boots that provide traction in snow and ice. After the fire was brought under control, McNicholas said the firefighters rotated on approximately 30-minute shifts to conserve energy, seeking refuge in warming buses.

"When you start getting that much ice buildup, we try to tell our guys, 'Slow down,' "McNicholas said.

By Wednesday afternoon, a handful of firefighters still were attempting to put out flames hidden beneath the frozen rubble.

Building once full of high-end furniture

Chicago Tribune

A blaze that engulfed a five-story structure in Bridgeport on Tuesday night once was the home of the now-defunct Harris Marcus Group, a company that made expensive lamps and furniture.

The company sold its 3737 S. Ashland Ave. location when it went out of business about 10 years ago, said Richard Horwood, the company's former lawyer.

"This was high-end" furniture, said Rubin Meraz, 54, who works at a nearby exporting company. "I'm telling you ... they don't put no junk out there."

A company named 3737 Ashland LLC has had ownership of the building since 2006, but it has not occupied it, according to public records and people who worked nearby.

City officials inspected the building on Jan. 5, 2010, and initiated a process to have the building demolished, Chicago Department of Buildings spokeswoman Susan Massel said

But later that month, the building's owner registered it as vacant property with the city. In March 2011, a Cook County Circuit judge issued a permanent injunction that the building should not be rented, leased or occupied until further notice, Massel said.

Fire officials said the large fire coupled with the old, heavy timber inside the building made the blaze more difficult to put out. It took around 200 firefighters about four hours to extinguish it, fire department spokesman Larry Langford said.

2 men died after rescuing resident

Chicago Tribune

Jameel Johnson didn't like working in high-rises, his family said, always fearing it would be hard to get out in an emergency.

But when fire struck Tuesday morning inside a 16-story South Shore building where he was installing satellite cable, Johnson, 36, didn't immediately think about his own escape. Instead, he and another man, John Fasula, 50, rescued an 81-year-old woman from her burning seventh-floor condominium unit.

The two men placed the woman in an elevator and pressed a button to take her down to the lobby. Then they grabbed fire extinguishers from the walls of the smoky hallway and went back to the apartment to try to put out the blaze. Fire officials later found their bodies on the floor outside the woman's unit.

"He died a hero," David A. Fields Jr., Johnson's cousin, said in between sobs. "They died saving a woman's life."

On Wednesday, the families of the fire's two victims gathered separately to remember the ones they lost. Relatives of both men said they weren't surprised to hear that they risked their lives for someone else.

"That's how my brother-in-law was," said Michelle Kozicki, 55. "There's never going to be another one like my brother-in-law Johnny [Fasula]. There's not a bad bone in his body."

Fasula, who lived in Bridgeport, was a maintenance manager for the CTA. At the time of the fire, he was working a side job at the building in the 6700 block of South Shore Drive, his family said.

Johnson, of Gary, was working as a private contractor for a cable company at the South Shore Drive building, his family said.

It was not clear where the men were when the blaze broke out at about 8:40 a.m. in the elderly woman's unit, authorities said. They got the panic-stricken woman into an elevator, then returned to her apartment with fire extinguishers, authorities said. She was in critical condition Wednesday.

Overcome by smoke, both suffered full cardiac arrest and collapsed, according to officials.

Taken to different hospitals, Johnson and Fasula died later Tuesday morning of the same cause, carbon monoxide intoxication due to smoke inhalation, according to the Cook County Medical Examiner's office.

M-Rahm wants a Wrigley deal

Hurdles remain for rehab project, but Emanuel is ready to play ball

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Emanuel indicated Wednesday that he'd like the various parties involved in Wrigley Field renovation talks to reach a compromise but doesn't want to negotiate his end of the deal in public.

Making his first public comments since Cubs CEO Tom Ricketts unveiled a proposal last weekend that would see the team pay $300 million to fix up the stadium in return for the city loosening advertising restrictions and granting other concessions, Emanuel said Wrigley Field is too important for this dispute to drag on.

"I want to ensure that it continues that kind of economic, vital, important role that it plays in the North Side of the city of Chicago and that community, which is why I'm also pleased they're also putting a hotel up," Emanuel said at a news conference to announce additional funding for agencies that provide free income tax preparation. "So I've asked all the parties involved to finish this up. We all have a stake in getting it done. It is not done till all the parts fall in place."

Emanuel, who has been cool to previous Ricketts requests for a share of amusement tax revenue to subsidize work at the 99-yearold park, positioned himself as the steward of the public purse strings in the dispute.

"When I first started this discussion, the Cubs wanted $200 million in taxpayer dollars. I said no," the mayor said. "Then they said we'd like $150 million, and I said no. Then they asked whether they could have $100 million in taxpayer subsidies, and I said no. Then they asked about $55 million in taxpayer subsidies. I said no. The good news is, after 15 months they heard the word 'No.' "

Plenty of obstacles remain before the Ricketts family can break ground. Ald. Tom Tunney (44th) has raised concerns about specifics of the plan, including a request that the city allow the team to put up more outfield advertisements, which could block the views from surrounding rooftop businesses where people pay to watch games. The alderman also wants the team to better address parking and traffic problems that have long been a headache for people who live in the congested neighborhood.

In addition, rooftop owners have come out against the proposal.

Asked what he says to rooftop owners who have invested heavily in the properties ringing Wrigley and could see their business suffer if the city grants the Ricketts family more billboards in the bleachers, Emanuel replied, "I'm not going to negotiate in public, but there's a lot of effort being made to finish this up."

The mayor wouldn't say how much power Tunney should have to shape the plan.

It's been just an amazingly awesome 10 years. But once you become a restaurant owneroperator, there's just no way."

Albany Park and Portage Park last week each recorded their first homicides of the year, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

In Albany Park, a 35-year-old woman died from wounds sustained from a fire Jan. 16 in the 4800 block of North Kenneth Avenue. officials said. Police determined that arson caused the fire, and the Cook County Medical Examiner's Office ruled the case a homicide.

Albany Park logged five homicides last year, up from three homicides in 2011, according to RedEve data.

In Portage Park, an 18-year-old man was shot to death Jan. 17 in the 3200 block of North Cicero Avenue, police said.

Portage Park recorded four homicides last year, up from two homicides in 2011, RedEye

Oops! Stabbed the wrong guy

Chicago Tribune

A robber accidentally was stabbed in the back by his partner as the pair held up a 70-yearold man on a Blue Line train downtown early Wednesday, police said.

The two approached the man inside the O'Hare-bound car near the LaSalle Street station around 12:30 a.m. after following him from the Kedzie stop on the West Side, police

One of the robbers walked up and accused the man of taking his phone, police said. The man tried to get to the other end of the car but the two followed him, hitting him and kicking him in the face while he was on the ground, then taking his wallet, police said.

One of the robbers tried to stab the man but accidentally stuck his 24-year-old partner, police said. He was taken to Northwestern Memorial Hospital, where he struggled to get out of his bed, spit on officers and had to be subdued, police said.

Britons to vote on EU membership

Prime Minister David Cameron promised Britons a vote on quitting the European Union, rattling London's biggest allies and some investors. Cameron announced Wednesday that the referendum would be held by the end of 2017provided he wins a second term.

Clinton defends Benghazi response

WASHINGTON Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Wednesday forcefully defended her handling of the Sept. 11 attack on the U.S. mission in the Libyan city of Benghazi and denied any effort to mislead the American

The attack by armed militants that killed U.S. Ambassador Christopher Stevens and three other Americans threatens to stain Clinton's legacy as secretary of state and could cast a longer shadow should she decide to make a White House run in 2016.

By turns emotional and fierce, Clinton choked up at one point in six hours of congressional testimony as she spoke of comforting the Benghazi victims' families and grew angry when a Republican accused the Obama administration of misleading the country over whether the attack stemmed from a protest.

"With all due respect, the fact is that we had four dead Americans," Clinton said angrily as she testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, an appearance delayed more than a month because of her ill health.

"Was it because of a protest, or was it because of guys out for a walk one night who decided they'd go kill some Americans? What difference, at this point, does it make?" she said, making chopping motions with her hands for emphasis.

"It is our job to figure out what happened and do everything we can to prevent it from ever happening again."

Clinton cast the Benghazi incident as part of a long history of such violence as well as the result of instability since the Arab Spring of popular revolutions began in 2011, toppling authoritarian rulers in Tunisia, Egypt, Libya and Yemen.

FEW NEW FINDINGS

Little new information about the Benghazi incident and the administration's response to it emerged from the lengthy hearings. Clinton did say that there were at least 20 other U.S. diplomatic posts under serious security threat, but she declined to name them at the public session.

"Benghazi did not happen in a vacuum," Clinton said. "The Arab revolutions have scrambled power dynamics and shattered security forces across the region."

Ban to be lifted on women in combat

WASHINGTON The U.S. military will formally end its ban on women serving in front-line combat roles, officials said Wednesday, in a move that could open thousands of fighting jobs to female service mem-

The move knocks down another societal barrier, after the Pentagon scrapped its "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" ban in 2011 on gays and lesbians serving openly in the military.

The decision by outgoing Defense Secretary Leon Panetta is expected to be formally announced Thursday and comes after 11 years of nonstop war that has seen dozens of women killed in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Women have represented about 2 percent of the casualties of those wars and some 12 percent of those deployed for the war effort. The unpopular, costly wars often had no clearly defined front lines, and where deadly guerrilla tactics have included roadside bombs that kill and maim indiscriminately.

The decision overturns a 1994 policy that prevents women from serving in small frontline combat units.

SPOITS KICKING SOME ASPEN

Evanston native Matt Ladley intends to dethrone snowboarding superstar Shaun White at the Winter X Games this weekend.

Shred, spin, land, repeat: Athletes grab serious air for Windy City at Winter X

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

Believe it or not, some people actually enjoy being out in the cold. In fact, their livelihoods depend on it. Oh, and they need lots of snow, too.

Two Chicago-area natives are raring to go for the 2013 Winter X Games: Matt Ladley will compete in snowboard superpipe, and Ashley Battersby is a contender in slopestyle skiing. The competition takes place Thursday through Sunday in Aspen, Colo., and airs on the ESPN networks.

RedEye talked to both athletes before they hit the slopes.

WATCH YOUR BACK, FLYING TOMATO

Even though he'll be facing off against a living legend in superstar snowboarder Shaun White, 21-year old Evanston native Matt Lad-ley is ready to take on the "Flying Tomato" in the Winter X Games this weekend.

"He's an incredible athlete, you know, and the best halfpipe rider—he's always stepping it up," Ladley said when reached by phone in Aspen this week. "But I'm feeling really good right now, and I'm really stoked because I've been healthy this year."

Not that the life of a pro snowboarder is easy. Even though this is his third X Games,

Snowboard Superpipe 101

One of the signature events at the Winter X Games, snowboard superpipe involves traversing a halfpipe with near 90-degree vertical walls that measure at least 18 feet from the bottom to the top. Boarders have several attempts to impress judges and pull off stunts—mostly variations of flips, spins and grabs. Shaun White has dominated the event, winning the past five gold medals and earning a perfect 10.0 score on his final run in 2012.

Ladley said the experience of being there before takes you only so far.

"The excitement level is so high, the adrenaline is pumping so much, that you almost don't even think, you just react," he said. "It's like a mix of adrenaline and fear and it's hard to breathe, and butterflies are jumping in your stomach, but it's also really exciting."

SKIING FOR GOLD—AND THE OLYMPICS

For Ashley Battersby's 25th birthday on Sunday, she's got an extra special present in mind-a Winter X Games gold medal. In her last three years at the X Games, she finished fourth twice and fifth another time.

"It's all I really want," the Park Ridge native said. "I'm stoked about it."

Of course, in slopestyle skiing, just completing a competition without injury is an accomplishment. The sport involves doing aerial spins, flips, grabs, grinds off rails and big jumps to impress judges.

Battersby has suffered three concussions in the past year-more than many professional football players.

"The scariest part for me is the jumps," she said. "You literally land on one jump and you're on the takeoff for the next—it's quite quick."

Canadian freestyle skier Sarah Burke, a four-time X Games champion, died from a major head injury suffered during a practice for last year's Games.

It's something that has stuck with Bat-

"She was a friend, so it's been rough," Battersby said. "We're a lot more careful now after what happened to Sarah, but still, this is a very dangerous sport and we're putting our lives at risk every day."

The slopestyle ski course at this year's X Games has been tamed a bit from last year's jaw-dropping obstacle course in Utah, with its 20-foot-high rails. But the competition won't get any easier.

Slopestyle Skiing 101

Slopestyle Skiing is a relatively new event in which riders perform tricks off a series of rails and ramps while descending down a hill outfitted with a manmade obstacle course. Slopestyle will make its Olympic debut at the 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia.

"Last year it was whoever could survive," she said. "This year it's more chill. This is more like who can get super creative on the

But even if she doesn't reach the medal stand this weekend, Battersby still has 2014 in Slopestyle skiing and snowboarding will debut as Olympic sports in Sochi, Russia, next year and she is currently on the U.S. Olympic team with hopes of qualifying.

Looking back, Battersby says going from high school cheerleader in the northwest suburbs to Olympic contender in a 10-year span has been

"Coming from the Midwest and to be competing at this intense level against eight of the best girls in the world—it's pretty amazing.'

Is that Obama you're wearing?

Left without an outerwear sponsor, pro skier Ashley Battersby decided that instead of wearing someone else's gear, she'd create her own. Little did she know her funky brand of self-made hoodies would soon get a lot of attention.

"A lot of kids were asking me where I got them and who made them, so I decided to start selling them," Battersby said.

> The result was A-Bomb Apparel, a website where you can purchase hats and hoodies with Rastafarian-, penguin- and even President Obama-printed gear.

Ladley, who finished fifth in snowboard superpipe last year, said most of the gravitydefying spins and flips performed at the X Games to impress the judges basically are the same for each competitor. Winning comes down to execution.

"It's about who can do it bigger, more consistently and with more style," said Ladley, who also finished third in the Dew Tour and second at the TTR World Snowboard Championships in 2012.

Luckily, he'll be close to home. These Winter X Games are being held in Aspen, about three hours from his current home in Steamboat Springs, Colo.

Ladley was born in Evanston, and his family moved to Park Ridge when he was 2. He fell in love with snowboarding at age 7 and recalls spending hours on the slopes of Raging Buffalo Park in Algonquin before moving to Colorado at age 11.

"I loved it more than anything, and my mom would drive me out there after school, and I stayed out there until everything closed at 8 p.m.," Ladley said.

SOSA: I'M A HALL OF FAMER

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

Your eves did not deceive you. Former Cubs slugger Sammy Sosa—aka the Pinterest guy conducted a live webcast Wednesday from Fort Lauderdale, Fla. With a moderator feeding him questions from followers on Ustream for about 10 minutes, he touched on subjects ranging from the Cubs to whether he believes he's a Hall of Famer to running for president in his native Dominican Republic (he's not interested).

On whether the Cubs have contacted him:

"I saw that that was in an email, a comment from the owner saying they wanted to reach me and wanted to speak to me. I don't have any problem with that. They know where I am. I believe that if they want to find me, they have to go up there and call me. I'm always available. Whenever they want to reach me, they know I'm here."

On whether he belongs in the Hall of Fame:

"I think so. I'm not gonna come here and say anything that is gonna jeopardize my future, but time will determine everything. Right now whatever it is, it is. I'm waiting for my time. I'm the type of person that doesn't like controversy. I'm going to wait here, but time will determine everything."

On whether the Cubs should retire his number.

"I think that is something that I'm looking for, that I want to happen. It's kind of surprising that it didn't happen before. But like I said, time will determine everything, and when that happens ... I'll be happy and I'll be there with all my family. I carried that number for 14 years in Chicago, and I represented that number [well], so that number should have been retired a long time ago."

Cooper's next role?

"Silver Linings Playbook" star Bradley Cooper told the BBC he would be up for playing cyclist Lance Armstrong in a reported biopic being developed by J.J. Abrams. "I remember Matt Damon was going to do [Armstrong's] autobiography years ago and thinking, I'd love to play that character," he said. Cooper might do more work to repair Armstrong's image than the disgraced cyclist has. Only 12 percent of Americans surveyed in an Ipsos poll for Reuters, conducted Jan. 18-22, said Armstrong appeared genuinely remorseful when confronted in his interview with Oprah Winfrey.

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT DOLPHIN, 2220 N. ASHLAND AVE. I CRAIG SEYMOUR, FOR REDEYE

The legendary Green Dolphin Street nightclub re-opened last weekend, sporting a facelift and ditching the "Green" and "Street" for a newly shortened name. We checked out the opening night bash to see if this beloved marine mammal still knew how to party. CRAIG SEYMOUR IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

What brings you out tonight?

It's the long weekend in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King [Jr.]. You gotta give it up.

What are you drinking and why?

Whatever I want and whatever gets put in front of me. Anything vodka, I'll take it.

How do you describe your

I guess it's a mix of Midwest with the West Coast.

What's your best style tip for guys?

[Wear] whatever Ryan Gosling wears.

Jazmin Jaramillo

29, works at John Barleycorn

What are you drinking and why?

I'm drinking a Jameson and ginger ale. Jameson's just my drink. Vodka, tequila, Jameson-I grew up with them.

If you could talk to a dolphin, what would you say?

[Makes dolphin sound.] I'm obsessed with dolphins. I love them so much. They have the smarts of normal human beings.

Calix Aguilar

22, terminal manager at O'Hare

How does this compare to the old Green Dolphin Street?

I think whoever did the decor did an amazing job. They did a great remodel and I'm waiting to see what the night is going to turn into, what kind of energy they bring.

If you could talk to a dolphin, what would you say?

Why do you hump people so much?

games

DmC: Devil May Cry Xbox 360, PlayStation 3

The snow-white hair and flamboyantly goth style are gone from the main character in this reboot of Capcom's popular "Devil May Cry" series. Protagonist Dante, a half-human, half-demon mercenary, has been reimagined as a cynical, skinny-jeans-wearing womanizer who looks and acts like the frontman of a rock band. The change is jarring, but the game more than makes up for it with brilliantly outlandish hack-and-slash action and inspiring design that takes you from a hellish Santa Monica Pier lookalike to surreal dreamscapes where nearly anything can and will happen.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH | FOR REDEYE

Wake the Cat ios This little iPhone puzzler seemingly was devised to deflect all the recent criticism of video games being too violentthe goal is to wake up a fluffy white kitten by tossing a ball of yarn at it. Yup, it's so inoffensive that it makes "Angry Birds" look like "Grand Theft Auto." But while it's easy to mock, "Wake the Cat" is surprisingly fun and addictive. There are 60 different levels in which you must launch a ball of varn past obstacles such as toy trains, fans, drums, pipes and gates in order to bump the kitten. Unfortunately, each level is super short, meaning you'll likely complete the game faster than the time it takes for, well, a catnap.

Ni no Kuni: Wrath of the White Witch

PlayStation 3

Once a steady part of many video gamers' diets, the Japanese role-playing game has very nearly died out-a casualty of modern tastes hungry for the more action-oriented "Mass Effects" or "Skyrims" of the world. But the awkwardly named "Ni no Kuni: Wrath of the White Witch" is a valiant attempt to bring back the magic of the old "Final Fantasy" era. After a glacially slow start wading through nearly an hour of animated cartoon scenes, the game opens up as the protagonist, a young boy named Oliver, is transported into another dimension to defeat some monstrous supernatural bad guy. From there "Ni no Kuni" hits almost all the familiar beats of the best JRPGs-but with the pleasant Pokemon-flavored twist of fighting with colorful creatures you capture in battle.

Get ready for the 'Runway'

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

After 10 seasons, "Project Runway" might be hitting the self-destruct button. The new season will have some big changes that will be worthwhile or really, really bad.

Pithy Michael Kors, always good for a French whore or "flamenco-dancing maid" analogy, is going to be absent most of the season. He's not leaving the show, but apparently running a huge fashion enterprise keeps him really busy all of a sudden. His part-time replacement is designer Zac Posen. Posen is younger, hipper and has better hair, but we doubt that he's as clever.

Kors will return for the finale as a guest judge. But that's not the only change this season.

The show will force all 16 designers, including Chicago-based Katelyn Pankoke, to compete as teams, but there still will be one winner. Team challenges have become synonymous with cat fights and crying on the show. Others already have pointed out that this twist was employed by Bravo's failed "The Fashion Show" series—which was a rip-off of "Project Runway" after the show split for its current home on Lifetime.

Whovile You'll NEVER GUESS WHOM WE'RE CASTING IN THE BAY WATCH' MOVIE HASSEL-VIIO?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

It's been a big week in bounce-bounce, bounce-bounce. Not only was it the roth anniversary of R. Kelly's "Ignition (Remix)," a "Baywatch" movie is in the works, thewrap.com reports. Bill Hader reportedly is in talks to play the David Hasselhoff character in the parody flick, directed by the guy behind "Reno 911!" Since everyone and their teenage brother is going to see this one, the rest of the casting decisions need to be pretty phenomenal. We took a crack at filling out the cast. DAMORANGIERBUNE.COM | GREDEYEDAMA

Michael Newman (Newmie)

Bryan Cranston

How does a lifeguard with a mustache get even more ridiculous? By being bald. Newmie was the only real-life lifeguard on "Baywatch," which explains why his mustache got to leer over the likes of Pam and Yasmine. Bryan Cranston's "Breaking Bad" experience will make this gaze even more menacing.

Jeremy Jackson (Hobie)

Justin Timberlake Jeremy was once known as "Mr. MySpace."

REDCYC BLUSTRATION

and his profile attracted nearly 76 million monthly visitors at its peak—way more Twitter followers than Lady Gaga has now. Justin is an investor in the currently rebooting Myspace AND he played Sean Parker in "The Social Network." He might just be the more successful version of Jeremy in real life, and now he can play him in the movies.

Yasmine Bleeth (Caroline)

Maya Rudolph

This might be a mistake, since she and Hader would have way too much fun making fun of Heidi behind her back, but she'd be a great comedic foil. She apparently also has a part in "Grown Ups 2," so this might be a better choice.

Pamela — Anderson

Heidi Montag Oh please, please, please, God. She needs this so bad. We're not really sure she can run arrymore, but that can be fixed in post-production.

Nicole Eggert (Summer)

Kristin Cavallari/ Amy Poehler In order to really confuse Heldi. Summer will be double-cast. During some scenes, Heidi will almost break down when she faces off against known enemy K-Cav, but the wryly witty (and, yes, somewhat older) Army will step in to mess with her head. Hey, we said this was a parody.

Just-in time

After news of a new alburn broke, it was only a matter of time before Justin Timberlake got back on stage. Now we have a date: Feb. 2. That's when JT will perform at the DirecTV Super Saturday Night event in New Orleans, in connection with the Super Bowl. Can a full-on tour announcement be far behind? Hmmm...

He's booking Matt Damon

Jimmy Kimmel better not run out of time for Matt Damon this time. After years of ending his show with a joke about leaving Damon hanging, the "Jimmy Kimmel Live" host actually will have him as a guest Thursday. ew.com reports. This will most definitely be some must-see TV.

per's new album, "Long.Live.A$AP," debuted at No. 1 on the Billboard 200 album chart. It's the first debut album to hit No. 1 since September, when 2 Chainz did it with "Based on a T.R.U. Story," He'll be in Chicago on March 22 as an opening act for Rihanna at the United Center.

A$AP Rocky is money, baby. The rap-
